as a token of friendship or "proposing marriage", police said. Later he would dupe them by impersonating Customs officials and taking money to release goods stuck in airports. So far, data of at least 200 women have been obtained from the gadgets seized from the accused. It seems, police said, the accused had tried to or duped them over the past five years.

Cyber cell inspector Sumit Kumar told TOI that the accused had created several social media accounts under different names. "He would send friend requests to potential targets and as soon as someone walked into his trap, Kaypirin would send expensive gifts as a token of friendship. The accused would later make calls to the victims posing as customs officers and duped them by making them pay 'customs fees' for the release of the gifts stuck at airports. In some ca-
